The trainer believed the colt would race better for the !!ttle $15,-000 jockey than he would for Ensor, and there is where the trainer made a fatal mistake. but neither he nor Jockey Wolke, who rode him, were injured. Gold Bond was considered to outclass his opponents and despite the short odds of 2 to 5 was heavily backed. When it came to racing he wasn't such a sure thing. He had much more speed than his opponents, but twice during the contest came mighty close to falling. While taking the liverpool the first time he landed badly and went to his knees. Bob Haynes, who was in his saddle, righted him quickly and raced him along head and head with Kisme for a round and a half in the field There Gold Bond went to the front and "looked like an easy winner, but when he came to the liverpool the second time he again landed badly, and for a second time went to his knees.
